deepwater boat docks. Six planned golf cottages will host visiting members and their guests in style.

The Briar's Creek residential community features large estate homes that blend traditional quality with every conceivable modern convenience. And everywhere at Briar's Creek—in the neighborhoods, along the golf course, around the stocked recreational lake and shading the nature trails—are the property's signature Grand Oaks, more than 1,500 of the ancient, moss-draped trees that give Briar's Creek

Briar's Creek is a private golf community with the finest members-only club in an area rich in history and world-famous for the quality of its courses.

Located on Johns Island in South Carolina, minutes from the historic city of Charleston and just up the road from internationally renowned Kiawah Island, The Golf Club at Briar's Creek is an extraordinary private course designed by acclaimed architect Rees Jones. Briar's Creek was named the "Best New Private Golf Course" in America by Golf Digest in 2002, the first of many accolades from leading industry publications. Even more significantly, Jones' masterful and environmentally sensitive creation earned Briar's Creek recognition as South Carolina's first Certified Silver Audubon Signature Sanctuary. And with memberships restricted to just 300, many of whom are non-residents, there are no reserved tee times at Briar's Creek. So whenever you're ready to play, the immaculate course and the top-flight professional staff are ready for you.

The impressive new Briar's Creek clubhouse opens this spring and features gourmet dining, a full-service golf shop and wide porches overlooking the club's two its uniquely spectacular look.

With the nearby cultural attractions of Charleston and the upscale resort amenities of Kiawah, Briar's Creek is the perfect location for players who want exclusive private access to the region's ultimate golf experience.
